People with Disabilities Living in the Community

February 2015

Thank goodness February is a short month! We hope everyone is staying safe and warm amidst all the snow.

Earlier this month, we spent a productive morning with many of the MetroWest legislators and the Easter Seals, at our annual Legislators Forum.

With a new administration, this year is especially important for advocacy and education work. We will be seeing changes at many of the higher level state positions. We need to help all of them understand the importance of Independent Living and the supporting services.

Speaking of Advocacy, Friday is PCA Advocacy Day. We hope you can join us and support this critical program. (Details below).

Sincerely,

Paul W. Spooner, Executive Director
MetroWest Center for Independent Living

Independent Living. These services allow people with disabilities to remain in their homes and the community and to stay out of institutions. These services are also significantly cheaper than institutional care, making Independent Living and the Personal Care Attendant Program a win for everyone.

Heroes in the Storms

Thank you to all of the Personal Care Attendants who put their clients first, and managed to get to their jobs through the worst weather we've seen in years.

The Boston Globe ran two stories about home care workers, but we know there are many, many more out there who went above and beyond.

Bring your stories to the State House next Friday.

Legislators Forum

On Friday, February 6, in between storms, we spent time with MetroWest Legislators and the Easter Seals to discuss Independent Living's legislative priorities. Our first challenge with the Baker administration is education!

Priorities discussed included increasing available accessible and affordable Housing, Assistive Technology, DME ReUse and the importance of maintaining existing services such as the PCA program.

We greatly appreciate the support we have received in the past from the MetroWest legislators, and the discussion showed that we can count on them going forward.

The Modern Asylum

Christine Montross wrote a provocative piece for the New York Times Opinion Pages.

She offers compelling arguments from her own experience as a hospital psychiatrist, and from an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association by three UPenn ethicists.

"Patients with chronic, severe mental illnesses are still in facilities - only now they are in medical hospitals, nursing homes and, increasingly, jails and prisons, places that are less appropriate and more expensive than long-term psychiatric institutions. The ethicists argue that the "way forward includes a return to psychiatric asylums." And they are right."

Ms. Montross says that institutionalization is happening now, but that people are ending up in prisons and hospitals, instead of places that could provide stability and structure. She describes a "modern asylum", modeled on residential facilities for patients with dementia, with "medication regimens and psychoeducation tailored to the needs of those living with mental illness."

We agree that there is a problem...
